Currently, Valencia could fairly precisely be identified as a city undergoing transition. The reason for this is because it is one of the longest-existing cities on the globe, yet in a lot of other areas is also one of the newest. Individuals that are interested in going to Valencia will of course have seen pictures that show that the city's buildings are centuries old, but a thing they might not have knowledge of is that Valencia bears a relationship with the recently erected City of Arts and Science. It is at one of the centres of modern thinking of today's world. This in combination with its hosting of the 2007 Americas Cup indicates how determined the government of Valencia is to making modern the city. It is this fusing of old and new worlds that makes Valencia such a charming location to fly to.

For anybody who is considering exploring Valencia, then you must fly in either the Autumn or Spring months. Valencia is likely to have somewhat severe temperatures in the other 2 seasons and those severe temperatures also are likely to take out the chance of several pursuits that you might be able to do in the Autumn or Spring months. This covers pursuits such as sun-bathing, walking and basically other open-air variety of pursuits. Being out-of-doors is a major part of having the complete Valencia experience and thus for such reason it is better to travel not in the Summer and Winter months.

There exist 2 major languages spoken in the location and those are Valencian and Spanish. For individuals who are in the urban areas of the province like the city of Valencia, then you can avoid speaking Spanish but English most of the time. On the other hand, for vacationers who are in the rural areas of the province then Valencian is the language of preference and some locals will even get offended if you talk to them in Spanish. In this case, it's an excellent thing to learn some Valencian before you go to witness this part of the world.

Altogether, Valencia is an extraordinarily beautiful city with a very abundant history that offers numerous sightseeing opportunities that you will appreciate.
